

WHY?

Angela and Glenn Fink have a autistic son, so they want to help others. Government help is lacking so they fill in the gaps.

HOW?

Reach Autism Learning collaborates with a speech therapist that works with children with autism in order to find new families to assist. They also gain clients by word of mouth. They have a website with information on how to contact them and how to support.

WHAT?

Angela and other volunteers meet with families individually to assist with their autistic child's education. They teach in a way that is more suited for autistic children that helps them learn easier. This allows children with autism to still receive education outside of conventional methods. They also coach families in strategies in raising autistic children
